REASONS FOR ALLOWANCE

The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: Lysen shows a method of measuring the orientation angle of a rotational axis to a reference line using a collimated light source that is rotated (figure 1 Ref 3), and using reference points (figure 1 Ref 4a, 4b, 4c, 4d, and 4e) in a reference line to determine the minimum distance between the collimated light beam and the reference line (figure 1 and column 1-3), the distance between the measurement locations is known and the orientation angle of the rotational axis to the reference line is calculated (figure 2). Lysen does not show that a string represents the reference line and that the measurements are taken with respect to the string only that the measurements are taken with respect to the reference line that the sensors make.

Wick teaches that a string can represent a reference line or reference plane that a rotational body may be manually measured with respect to and that the minimum distance between a collimated light beam and a reference string can be measured at more than one locations (column 1 line 13-37). Wick does not show a collimated light source that is rotated, or that the distance between the locations is known. It would have been obvious to modify Lysen to include the reference string taught by Wick because a string is a simple way to show a reference line between two points and would be simple to take a measurement with respect to a rotational body as taught by Wick. However neither Lysen nor Wick show a collimated light source that is movable substantially perpendicular to the reference line and the movement is measured relative to a portable mounting base and the movement is measured using a scale.
